Welcome from the WLU President

Welcome to the Whole Language Umbrella's 2010 Literacies for All Summer Institute in Indianapolis, Indiana. We are looking forward to an outstanding array of sessions and presenters whose shared experiences will spark many great conversations to come. This year's Literacies for All Summer Institute focuses on "Reflecting on Our Practice" featuring well-known and new voices from our literacy community. Educator Kathryn Mitchell Pierce opens the conference on Thursday evening. Kathryn is a longtime member of WLU and an enlightened educator and classroom teacher. We then have the pleasure of engaging in the stories of researcher Eric Paulson, the intriguing work of illustrator Kevin O'Malley, and the wisdom of educator and writer Franki Sibberson. Together we can take this opportunity to reflect on our practice and explore new pathways and possibilities for literacy education. Side-by-side we will welcome opportunities to think about where we've been and what new directions will sustain and nourish the literate identities of the learners in our classrooms.

If you are a returning WLU member you already know the value of the intimate and close-knit group of colleagues who treat this conference as a way to annually come together and share their experiences, classroom research, and learning. I want to especially welcome to the conference those new faces joining us for the first time. We look forward to hearing new voices and insights because you are the future of teaching and learning. Newcomers will find this Summer Institute friendly and brimming with interactive discussions and interesting sidebars that focus on the rights and privileges of all readers and writers. The WLU conference is replete with well respected educators who have spent their lives mentoring other teachers and colleagues. I strongly encourage those returning and those joining us for the first time to come together to scaffold and support one another and find ways of extending the mentoring experience beyond the conference walls.

As you know, the conference theme is “reflection.” Ever since I can remember, I have been asked to “reflect on my practice” as a teacher and I believe that practice has morphed into a major part of teacher education curriculum. In fact, the pre-service teachers I work with in Oregon tell me they have never reflected so much in their lives! Having a conversation with a group of them recently led to wonder what we really meant when we asked them to “reflect on their practice.” Were we asking the right question? My aha moment came when my three-year-old grandson Sebastian recently walked into the living room and asked with great interest, “So, what’s going on in here?!”. Children ask wise and pertinent questions. Sebastian’s obvious interest in the conversations and activities in our living room and how he might join in, led me to consider asking the same question of my beliefs about teaching and learning in classrooms and communities. What is really going on and why?

During the conference, as you talk with and listen to new friends and old, I would challenge you to reflect on your practice through the lens of Sebastian’s well formed question: “So, what’s going on in here?” and do our beliefs support the direction of literacy learning, teaching, and teacher education?

In the next few days you will have the opportunity to interact with literacy coaches and colleagues inquiring into what it means to support literacy learning in a world where political forces daily threaten our persona and appear intent on polarizing our right to make instructional decisions as teachers and learners. Discussing our individual histories as teachers will undoubtedly show us new directions and possibilities as we create pathways for renewed passions, energy, and future accomplishments.

In closing, I want to acknowledge those teachers, educators, and researchers whose histories built the frameworks for this conference. I encourage us to embrace the time, energy, and commitment to collaboration, authentic language use, and holistic assessment of language learning to which so many of our colleagues have devoted their lives. The founders of the whole language movement have never wavered in their commitment to advocating for the right to learn of all children and have firmly stood their ground on the importance of the classroom teacher as decision maker and instructional leader.

On behalf of the WLU Board, welcome and please let us know how we can be of service during the conference. We look forward to learning with you here in Indianapolis and many WLU years to come.

Ladies and Gentleman, start your engines!

Welcome to Indianapolis, home of the famed Indianapolis Motor Speedway, and the 21st Annual Whole Language Umbrella Literacies for All Summer Institute! I am thrilled to welcome you, my friends and colleagues, for what is sure to be another enlightening weekend of learning as we charge our professional batteries and fill up our proverbial gas tanks.

Our theme this year highlights the many pathways and possibilities that learners take on their way to becoming literate, and I invite you to take some time to experience all the pathways and possibilities that Indianapolis has to offer. We have a host of downtown museums and galleries, as well as stores and restaurants galore, all within easy walking distance of the Marriott. If you’re looking for a leisurely stroll, or a place for serious exercise in close proximity to downtown, you won’t want to miss the beautiful White River and Canal paths that wind past the Indianapolis Zoo (home of a new exhibit of cheetahs), the Indiana State Museum, the Eiteljorg Museum of American Indians & Western Art, the Indiana State Museum and the Indiana History Center. If art galleries are more your style, head to Massachusetts Avenue to find a variety of local art. Is mall shopping what you’re looking for? The Circle Center Mall is connected by walkways to the Marriott.

Not too far from downtown, you’ll find the world renowned Indianapolis Children’s Museum and the admission free Indianapolis Museum of Art. If you’re looking for an afternoon of kitschy & eclectic shopping or an evening of fun, a short cab ride from downtown is the Greenwich Village of Indianapolis, Broad Ripple Village. Filled with shops, local restaurants and bars, it’s sure not to disappoint.

Again, on behalf of all Indiana educators, I welcome you to Indianapolis, and hope you enjoy your stay. If you need any assistance while you are here, please don’t hesitate to ask me or any one of our local conference attendees.

Sincerely,

Karen Goldstein

What's It Like Being You?

Kathryn Mitchell Pierce, Writing Teacher, and Edward Kastner, Computer Art and Photography Teacher, have been collaboratively exploring ways of integrating the PhotoVoice process into their combined classes. The collaboration has helped both teachers see new potential in their individual and combined classes, provided a lens for critiquing their understanding of the PhotoVoice process, and offered new insights into ways of helping middle school students find and share their voices, to talk about their lives in and out of school. Examples of student writing and photography will be used to share student voices about middle school life, and to explore implications for the ways we teach literacy, the ways we do school.

Eye Movement / Miscue Analysis: Looking At / Listening To Reading

This session will focus on the research approach of Eye Movement / Miscue Analysis—EMMA, for short—and its contributions to understanding how reading works. We will discuss what happens when readers make miscues and show how EMMA data demonstrate ongoing use of context in action. We will talk about how and why all readers "skip" words (and why that's a good thing) and discuss how readers selectively sample text in a nonlinear way while engaging in meaning-making with a text. In general, we will focus on the informative and fascinating "map" of reading that EMMA can provide.

Poetic Expressions: Read Aloud
Florida Room

While exposing participants to varied types, styles, and authors of poems, I will offer an opportunity to widen a base for using expressive literary art as it relates to students in their own community, more specifically inner-city youth. This session is designed to serve high school teachers on all grade levels. The information received from this session can be applied in an English Language Arts classroom, but can be altered to fit a framework for an after school poets’ club, too.

Pen in Hand? A World of Possibilities

Speakers:
Ann Mennonno, Karla Reilly, Latosha Rowley

The Friday luncheon is the time for attendees to meet new friends, or connect with old ones. Enjoy stimulating conversation with like-minded people as you enjoy your lunch. Then listen to Center for Inquiry teachers discuss how their students have used writing as an opportunity to self-discover and self-reflect on their life experiences. Writing provides a framework for self-discovery, self-reflection, and opportunities for all of us, teachers and students alike, to share our unique histories and life experiences. What questions do we ask ourselves when we have pen in hand? “Every day this week, I’ve asked myself why I teach. Wednesday I came home and cried so hard my eyes were swollen the whole next morning. I feel like such a failure because I know I’ve let my kids down, my parents down, and my principal down. I don’t know why I can’t seem to get the hang of this teaching thing.”

Book by Book: Creating Observant Readers
Illinois Ballroom

In this session we’ll share a new set of strategies we call Notice and Note Mini-lessons that we’re using with struggling readers to help them read a literary text more critically. These mini-lessons help students understand what they might watch for in a text—what they should notice—and teach them how they might think about those observations—what they might note. In doing so, readers make connections and predictions in a text so that they notice the changes in characters and conflict and more quickly identify themes. It’s a hands-on session—so come prepared to jump into a text we’ll provide and do some noticing and noting!

Illinois Room

In this presentation, we will discuss how teachers and teacher educators conceptualize Multicultural Education by reflecting on our own approaches in comparison with various models of Multicultural Education. Based on the sample metaphors which were created by elementary, English, and TESOL/bilingual teachers, we will also explore the possibility of metaphors as a window to understand how we view Multicultural Education and what we hope for in it.

TABLE ONE
Can You Hear Me Now? Connecting Students, Parents, and Teachers

Accomplished teachers know the value of active, involved parents in learning communities. Sometimes, however, finding ways to open lines of communication and more importantly, to keep them open, is difficult even in the age of instantaneous, limitless communication. This session will focus on creative strategies to communicate effectively.

Presenters:
Donna Bingham, Southern Pulaski Middle School, Somerset, KY
Kristi Jenkins, Somerset High School, Somerset, KY

TABLE TWO
PACE Model: Story-based Grammar Learning for Fun and Collaborative Language Classrooms

This presentation will focus on story-based grammar instruction drawing on a teaching model called PACE. Using content rich materials, the PACE model aims to provide meaningful input, guided-participatory grammar explanation, and communicative activities. A review of theoretical perspectives, classroom activities, learning outcomes, and lesson plan sharing will be included.

Discussion Leader:
Chinatsu Sazawa, Drake University, Des Moines, IA
SATURDAY, JULY 10

Session/Panel
Consider the Role of the Text when Readers Read
Indiana Ballroom A

The role of the text is an integral part of the reading process. Using examples from children’s Miscue Analysis sessions, participants will examine the ways that texts influence readers’ reading transactions and discuss the value of readers’ efforts to work with texts to comprehend what they are reading.

Chair: Mary Fahrenbruck, University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

F.02
Session/Panel
Practicing Reflection via Writing Conferencing across the Spectrum of School
Indiana Ballroom B

Conferencing during writers’ workshop is not a new concept, yet it is difficult to learn and takes on different meanings depending on who is doing the talking. This presentation will explore how a professional development school learned to conference, from elementary students through university faculty.

Chair: Meadow Graham, West Virginia University, Morgantown, WV

Empowering Teachers to Empower Students in Literacy: A Reflective Self-Study
Indiana Ballroom C

The team will share what they learned about how using elements from each of several selected models of teaching reading in a self-reflective way empowered them as teachers and in turned helped them empower their students as readers. The study includes work done with the whole class but focuses on the teams’ efforts to help bring four previously reluctant readers into “The Reading Zone.”

Making the Joy of Teaching and Learning Contagious

In these times of testing and standards, it is often difficult to remember the joy of our work. But there are things we can do to make the days more joyful for our students and colleagues. We will close the conference by celebrating the joys that are so much a part of our work with children.

Franki also writes regularly in the blog she shares with Mary Lee Hahn, “A Year of Reading.” Access the blog at: http://readingyear.blogspot.com/.
