Welcome from the WLU President

Welcome to the Whole Language Umbrella’s 2011 Literacies for All Summer Institute in Las Vegas, Nevada. We are looking forward to an exciting array of sessions and presenters whose shared experiences will spark many great conversations to come. This year’s Literacies for All Summer Institute focuses on “Teachers, Students, and Families Together: Nurturing Literate Communities” featuring a variety of voices from the literacy community. Well known for his work with urban adolescents, educator Ernest Morrell opens the conference on Thursday evening. Mariana Souto-Manning, whose expertise lies in early childhood education, will be the Friday morning General Session Speaker. On Saturday morning, we will have the pleasure of engaging in the stories and work of Kadir Nelson. Linda Christensen, Director of the Oregon Writing Project at Lewis and Clark College will close the Institute. In addition to our major speakers, there will be small break-out sessions where participants will have the opportunity to examine and discuss together the rich contexts of family and community literacy as well as the research and work of a variety of teacher researchers from Nevada. Side-by-side we will welcome opportunities to consider the rich influence of family and communities on literacy and learning.

I want to especially welcome to the conference those of you joining us for the first time. We look forward to hearing your voices and insights because you are the future of teaching and learning. Newcomers will find this Summer Institute friendly and brimming with interactive discussions and interesting sidebars that focus on the rights and privileges of all readers and writers. It is a gathering replete with a family of well-respected whole language educators who have spent their lives mentoring other teachers and colleagues as a community of learners.

Some of you may not have a history as whole language teachers or learners so I would like to share an anecdote of explanation. At a recent meeting of NCTE, a secondary English teacher read my name tag that identified me as the WLU president asked me to explain what was meant by “whole language.” “Is it like literature study and writing workshop?” she asked. No one had asked me that question in a long time and I was reminded of what my dear, pragmatic friend Dorothy Watson told me so many years ago. “Whole language is not a strategy or method. It’s the way we believe learning takes place . . . . starting from the whole story. No one gets much out of examining words and sentences unless they tell a story.” By the same token, each child brings with him or her, a story. They enter our classrooms with experiences that we cannot realize, some good, some not so good, and some tragic. But we cannot let those perceptions of the quality of family and community hinder the acceptance that each child, regardless of age, gender, or heritage, carries with him or her — a literate legacy of family and community that will guide us in building classroom learning communities that scaffold the literate identities of their members.

The questions we now turn to are: what makes us literate and how do we engage the families of our children in learning communities that support the whole child? Who are the families of our children and what are their literate routines and customs? What do they read, talk, and write about? What kinds of conversations evolve during their daily lives and what are the many contexts and meanings of those conversations? How do we, as educators, ensure that the literate and multicultural contexts in which learners are developing outside the classroom are reflected within the school community?
During the 2010 WLU summer institute in Indianapolis, we were challenged to reflect on our practice as teachers and learners. This year, we extend the invitation to include the broader notion of nurturing the literate identities of teachers, learners, and their family rituals, beliefs, and experiences. Last year, I quoted my grandson who is now four years old, who at the time loved to stride into any given family setting and ask, “What’s going on in here?” In thinking about families and how children learn within their families and communities, I’d like to continue to share with you a bit more about what Sebastian has taught me about what goes on in the world of family and community literacy. Sebastian attends preschool twice a week, is learning Spanish from Teacher Irma, and reads environmental print with great interest and intentionality, first reading the whole word and then telling me the letters and how they sound. I distinctly remember when he first read “Wal-Mart” at age 3 because it has a W and an A, and informed me that’s where daddy does the grocery shopping. No one had to tell him to “stretch out the word.” I realized he learned that when he had earlier figured out how to read his name—because it had meaning for him. When words have meaning, children will read.

Family literacy and ritual is strong at Sebastian’s house. His daddy, Scott, reads a chapter to him every night from their favorite book, The Wizard of Oz. Sebastian carefully pointed out other “chapter” books to me during a recent stroll through Borders. Scott is teaching Sebastian to cook because at his house, “Daddy cooks and Mommy does the laundry.” His Mommy, Molly, is teaching him to paint, recognize and sing classical and blues music, clip coupons, and to discover the states where all his relatives live. His most recent musical accomplishment is from Diana Ross and the Supremes, “Stop in the name of love, before you break my heart!” Sebastian hasn’t yet mastered the use of he/she pronouns, using them interchangeably in a charming, sometimes disarming fashion, and he loves the color pink; in fact, his favorite car at Toys R Us is the hot pink Barbie Jeep. He has no gender bias and very much wants a baby sister because he already has a baby brother. He alternately and appropriately calls Mommy “Molly” and Daddy, “Scott,” signifying he recognizes them as people and as parents.

Like many curious toddlers, Sebastian’s knowledge of animals is quite robust: he learned from his naturalist grandfather all about how moose shed antlers in the fall and grow them in the spring and can deftly describe to you the difference between a deer, an elk, a buffalo, and a moose—something most adult tourists in Yellowstone Park cannot do. He will tell you that the Tetons are his favorite mountains and that the painting in Gram and Papa’s room is of trumpeter swans; he has experienced both first-hand and through art and books. I hope his kindergarten teacher lets him and his friends plan the thematic units on animals.

Sebastian will enter kindergarten one year from now with a rich repertoire of language, culture, and family ritual. How do we honor the communities of knowledge from which children like my grandson spring and make them a part of the classroom context? It is my hope that you take away from this conference if not answers, at least some ideas, to this complex and multifaceted question.

During the conference, as you talk with new friends and old, I would encourage you to reflect on your unique beliefs, your family, your cultures, and your communities and share them with others as we build the larger learning community from the inside out . . . a pathway that the whole language movement has historically embraced. Discussing our individual experiences, similarities, and differences as communities of learners will undoubtedly show us new directions and possibilities for renewed passions, energy, and future accomplishments. Let us commit ourselves to what Frank Smith termed as “living off the land” of our own existence as members of an intricate and literate society surrounded by the truth and literacy of our own art, culture, treasured beliefs and rituals that make us whole.

In closing, I want to acknowledge those teachers, university affiliates, parents and community members who built the frameworks for this conference. I encourage us during our time together to embrace the time, energy, and commitment to collaboration, and the inclusion of the culture and community that extends beyond the classroom walls. The founders of the whole language movement have never wavered in their commitment to advocating for the right to learn of all children and have firmly stood their ground on the importance of respecting and honoring the many contexts of family and community within the school curriculum. We dedicate this conference to those beliefs.

On behalf of the WLU Board, welcome and please let us know how we can be of service during the conference. We look forward to learning with you here in Las Vegas and many WLU years to come. Enjoy!

Welcome from Marilyn McKinney
Local Conference Planning Liaison

Welcome to Vegas—to the desert, the fabulous Las Vegas strip, and our many magnificent natural wonders! We are pleased and honored to be hosting the 22nd Annual Whole Language Umbrella Summer Institute, Literacies for All! What better place than here amidst the neon lights to gather with colleagues from around the globe to engage in meaningful dialogue about issues and ideas that always make this Institute so effective in nudging us more deeply and passionately into our work.

I invite you to experience the energy and excitement of the conference and the city. Renew! Revitalize! Breathe the great western skies and nights! Las Vegas provides an amazing array of sights and sounds — there is literally something here for everyone! Experience Paris, Venice, and one of my favorites: Cooling in the mists of the Bellagio Fountains, then walking inside under the Chihuly ceiling sculpture and into the magic of a seasonal display at the Conservatory and Botanical Gardens. Shopping opportunities abound — check out the Fashion Show Mall across from the Wynn, the Miracle Mile at Planet Hollywood, the Forum Shops at Caesar’s, and Canal Shops at the Venetian. The architecture and dozens of new sculptures at the recently opened City Center will not disappoint. The real downtown area of Vegas is worth seeing too. It sports the Fremont Experience canopy and a more old-time feel.

Away from the glitter and within easy driving distance you can explore: Red Rock Canyon (spectacular beauty, amazing geology, and ancient rock art), Hoover Dam, and Springs Preserve (great for kids too, opened just a few years ago). About 45 minutes away are the Spring Mountains (often referred to as “Mt. Charleston” by locals), a great place for picnics, hiking, and just relaxing in cool mountain air.

On behalf of the teachers, students, and families who dwell in this unique and vibrant community, I thank you for coming to this place we call home. We hope you will have many opportunities to explore together the conference theme of nurturing literate communities. During your stay, please don’t hesitate to ask me or other local conference attendees for assistance. And relax, if you don’t manage to see and do everything you want on this trip, the NCTE Annual Convention in 2012 will provide another opportunity!

Sincerely,

Marilyn McKinney
Tribute to Ethel Buchanan
July 6, 1916 – March 19, 2011

Ethel Buchanan, a Primary Supervisor with Winnipeg Public School Board, in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, along with a group of like-minded teachers and principals, established CEL (Child Centered-Experience Based Learning), based on the latest available research on how children learned and the role of language in learning. This was in the late 1970s; their work continued throughout the 1980s and into the early 1990s.

All teachers and principals who were involved with CEL practiced their beliefs in their own classrooms. They also provided in-service sessions and workshops in their own city, throughout the province of Manitoba and then in Alberta and other centres. They spoke at conferences and conventions across North America. Ethel and three other principals/teachers, all members of CEL, coauthored a book based on their beliefs and experiences. The book “Reading, Writing and Caring”, was then used as a text or reference book in 150 universities in Canada, the United States, and Australia. As her last major project, Ethel gathered 5000 samples of student spelling from schools in Winnipeg, analyzed her samples, and then wrote a book “Spelling for Whole Language Classrooms” that is still in use today.

The CEL group held their own conferences in Winnipeg every February for about 10 years. Founders and members of WLU were always in attendance at the conference as both speakers and observers, and in the early days, held WLU organizational meetings at CEL conferences.

Ethel Buchanan was named a Whole Language Founding Mother and, along with the other Founding Mothers, was presented with a silver umbrella pin and plaque at the WLU Conference in 1995. She will be missed by family, friends, teachers, and colleagues of the field.

Preconference Workshop
Goldfield & Tonopah Rooms
11:45 a.m. – 6:00 p.m.

Building Classroom Reading Communities

This preconference program will engage participants in demonstrations of how to conduct retrospective miscue analysis with small groups of students within a classroom setting. Students talking about their miscues and exploring miscues and reading strategies of others establishes classroom reading communities benefiting all readers. By attending this workshop, participants will gain a greater understanding of the reading process and learn ways of encouraging readers to learn with, and from, one another. Organizing more sustainable classroom reading communities and developing strategies for using Socratic Circle techniques in their reading curriculum will be shared. Participants will take away new ways of listening to children read, new lenses of understanding how children learn most by listening and talking to one another as readers, and how to build stronger communities of readers.

Ernest Morrell

Nurturing Literate Communities through Youth Participatory Action Research

Ernest Morrell is Associate Professor of Urban Education and Cultural Studies and Associate Director of Youth Research at the Institute for Democracy, Education, and Access (IDEA) at UCLA. He is a writer of poems, plays, essays, novels, academic books, book chapters, articles, and encyclopedia entries. Ernest is the author of Linking Literacy and Popular Culture: Finding Connections for Lifelong Learning and Becoming Critical Researchers: Literacy and Empowerment for Urban Youth. For more than a decade he has worked with adolescents, drawing on their involvement with popular culture to promote academic literacy development.

Opening General Session
Reno Room

Introduction of Featured Speaker: Bonnee Breese

Mariana Souto-Manning

Revisioning Everyday Texts, Envisioning Changes

This session problematizes taken-for-granted understandings of what counts as reading, writing, and texts. It explores ways in which children revision everyday texts dialogically and change their own classrooms and communities. In it, Souto-Manning will share examples of the hybrid and expansive ways in which children collectively envision and carry out change as they read and (re)write words and worlds. Learning with children and theorizing from practice, she will offer implications for teaching transformatively.

FRIDAY, JULY 22

10:00 a.m. – 11:15 a.m.

A SESSIONS

A.01
Session/Panel
Connecting Family Literacy with School Literacy Knowledge
( Elementary, Primary/Preschool)
Elko Room

The purpose of this home visitation project is to connect family literacy with school literacy knowledge to provide children an opportunity to succeed academically. Participating parents were invited to present, in Spanish, ways they supported their children’s academic learning at a parent workshop hosted by a local elementary school.

Chair: Connie Montgomery, California State University, Palm Desert
A SESSIONS

A.02
Session/Panel
What Have You Learned about How You Think as a Reader?
Instructing toward Identity through Discussion (Elementary)
Ely Room

Two classroom teachers will share about their year-long inquiry investigating the use of discussion-based instructional frameworks to help support fourth- and fifth grade students in constructing identities as meaning–making readers who process text for understanding as they engage in their literate communities.

Presenter: Emily Whitecotton, Nursery Road Elementary School, Columbia, SC

A.03
Session/Panel
An Easy Method to Teach Narrative in Early Grades: Literacy Practice for English Language Learners (Elementary, Librarians, New Teachers)
Goldfield Room

Objective: To empower children by giving them the opportunity to express their voice in creating stories and imbuing them with their own meanings. To help children acquire the concept of “story” as a coherent flow of events (with a beginning, a middle, and an end), and internalize the narrative structure.

Presenter: Veronika Martenova Charles, York University, Toronto, Ontario, Canada

A.04
Session/Panel
A Whole New Language: Comics and 21st-Century Literacy (Middle School, High School)
Tonopah Room

This highly-interactive session will use whole language pedagogy to teach participants about sequential art narratives. Participants will be immersed in examples from acclaimed graphic novels to promote discussion about the medium and provide scaffolding for creating their own mini-comics during the session.

Chair: Nick Kremer, University of Missouri, Columbia
FRIDAY, JULY 22

A SESSIONS

A.05
Session/Panel
Linking Literate Lives through Community-Academic Partnerships
(Teacher Educators, Administrators, Curriculum Specialist)
Laughlin Room

Teacher educators and educational researchers will share perspectives of how three community-academic partnership programs helped to illuminate and link the literate lives of the participants involved through a holistic journey of mutual learning and care. Audience participation is welcome as the possibilities for nurturing and sharing literacy learning through community-academic partnerships are explored.

Chair: Mark Kohan, University of Cincinnati, OH
Presenter: Lisa Vaughn, Cincinnati Children’s Hospital Medical Center, OH
Juanjuan Zhao, University of Cincinnati, OH

A.06
Roundtable
Engaging High School Students through Scaffolded Silent Reading and Personal Essay Writing through the Senior Thesis (High School, New Teachers)
Silver Room

Getting teenagers to enjoy reading and understand what they read can be a challenge. Encouraging them to write is also challenging, but personal essay writing can help. In this presentation, I will discuss ways teachers can engage students in reading and writing through Scaffolded Silent Reading and the Senior Thesis.

Presenter: Chandra West, Opelika High School, Opelika, AL
FRIDAY, JULY 22

10:00 a.m. – 11:15 a.m.

A SESSIONS

A.07
Session/Panel
Imagining the Possible: Agency and Identity through Multimodal Literacies (Administrators, Curriculum Specialist)
Copper Room

The purpose of this panel is not only to advocate for innovative and creative pedagogical changes within all classrooms—from elementary through college—but also to provide both a theoretical framework and practical examples that can accomplish this goal.

Presenters: Marilyn Buono, Hofstra University School of Education, Hempstead, NY
Elizabeth Hynes-Musnisky, Hofstra University School of Education, Hempstead, NY
Melinda Smith, Hofstra University School of Education, Hempstead, NY

A.08
Session/Panel
Valuing Language Study for Language Arts Curriculum (Elementary, Middle School, High School, Primary/Preschool, New Teachers, Curriculum Specialist)
Reno Room

We explore the power of teaching and learning about language in language arts classrooms. We explore ways to engage students in inquiry into Language Study raising language to a conscious level. We revalue language, literacy learning, and teaching.

Chair: Mary Fahrenbruck, Grand Valley State University, Grand Rapids, MI
Presenters: Mary Fahrenbruck, Grand Valley State University, Grand Rapids, MI

B SESSIONS

B.01

Paper Session (1.25 hours)

Pre-service Teachers’ Comparative Analyses of Teacher-/Parent-Child Talk: Making Literacy Teaching Explicit and Children’s Literacy Learning Visible (Teacher Educators, Primary/Preschool)

Elko Room

This paper reports the results of a meta-analysis of pre-service teachers’ comparative investigations of two transcripts of teacher/student talk. Pre-service teachers worked with a variety of tools of analysis and their knowledge of the role of talk in literate, cultural, and social practices to analyze the effectiveness of literacy pedagogy.

Presenter: Deborah Geoghegan, University of Southern Queensland, Toowoomba, Queensland, Australia

B.02

Session/Panel

Real Kids and Real Life. . . .Why Not Real Books? (Elementary, Administrators)

Goldfield Room

Real Kids, Real Life. . . .Why Not Real Books? This session highlights our work with fourth-grade students in two classrooms in the midwestern and southern United States as they read and responded to The Higher Power of Lucky by Susan Patron.

Chair: Renita Schmidt, Furman University, Greenville, SC

Presenters: Renita Schmidt, Furman University, Greenville, SC

Kathy Whitmore, The University of Iowa College of Education, Iowa City, Iowa

B.03

Session/Panel

Becoming Writers: Visions and Decisions (Elementary, Teacher Educators, New Teachers)

Ely Room

This proposed session aims to demonstrate the ways in which young elementary age writers and their teachers build literate lives together, specifically attending to their use of writing as a tool for thinking, engaging in writing for a variety of purposes, as well as understanding and articulating their processes and decision-making en route.

Presenters: Beatrice Mazoyer, Lycee Francais de Chicago

Hadley Smillie, Lycee Francais de Chicago
11:30 a.m. – 12:45 p.m.

B SESSIONS

B.04
Session/Panel
Using Touchstone Books as Bridges to Connect Home and School Literacy Learning (Elementary, Teacher Educators, Administrators, New Teachers, Curriculum Specialist)
Laughlin Room

Linking classroom routines to home literacy practices helps families establish daily routines to foster a reading “habit” and helps “level the playing field” for marginalized families. This workshop shares effective ways to begin the process by using touchstone texts to connect home and school literacy learning in authentic ways.

Chair: Jane Baskwill, Mount Saint Vincent University, Halifax, NS
Presenter: Jane Baskwill, Mount Saint Vincent University, Halifax, NS

B.05
Session/Panel
“If you really knew about my life . . . .” Using Mentor Texts with At-Risk and Special Education Students to Increase Critical Awareness and Engagements with Literacy (Elementary, Middle School)
Tonopah Room

This research explores one teacher’s approach to meeting the academic needs of students labeled at-risk or learning disabled through the support of mentor texts. Specifically, this session will describe the ways these texts encouraged discussions of family and community that built basic skills and engagements with critical literacy.

Chair: Kattie Hogan, Warren Woods Middle School, Warren, MI

B.06
Session/Panel
Are adolescent learners being ignored? An Examination of Recent Research in Adolescent Literacy (Middle School, Teacher Educators)
Silver Room

Over 1000 articles in key journals over the previous six years were analyzed for content related to adolescent literacy. This session tracks the trends and gaps in the current research and compares the results with a similar study from the previous decade.

Presenters: Clayton Leishman, University of South Carolina, Columbia, SC
John Robertson, University of South Carolina, Columbia, SC
11:30 a.m. – 12:45 p.m.

C SESSIONS

C.02
Paper Session (1.25 hours)
Developing an After-School Literacy Program with Family Involvement (Elementary, Parents)
Ely Room

This session will show you how to develop an after school literacy tutoring program with family involvement to include a discussion of program development, instruction, and materials.

Chair: Lucy Spence, University of South Carolina, Columbia
Presenters: Lucy Spence, University of South Carolina, Columbia
David Brink, University of South Carolina, Columbia

C.03
Session/Panel
Words, Words, Words: Growing the Academic Vocabulary Knowledge of All Students (Special Education Students Too!)
(Middle School, High School)
Goldfield Room

This session will be helpful for anyone who has struggled with teaching vocabulary to students who have difficulty learning academic vocabulary. The strategies that will be demonstrated are based on the concept of “transmediation” which involves taking information that is one form and presenting it in another.

Presenter: Janice Henson, Central Methodist University, Fayette, MO

C.04
Roundtable
Expanding Thinking about ELL Writing with Pre-service Teachers
Laughlin Room

Using an article by Lucy Spence (2010, The Reading Teacher) and asking pre-service teachers to read ELL students’ writing through “generous” eyes results in a spectrum of responses. The session will show how a course assignment asking pre-service teachers to expand their thinking about the writing of ELL students can lead to a transformation in thinking about the way teachers assess writing in a critical way. A range of responses, though, assists us to understand that the practice of viewing and critiquing writing punitively rather than generously is deeply ingrained and often based on our own previous school experiences with writing.

Presenter: Victoria Seeger, Stephen F. Austin State University, Nacogdoches, TX

Roundtable
Conversations that Matter Most: Facilitating Student-Led Policy in the AP Language Classroom
Tonopah Room

What I have found, in my classroom, is that when students assume co-ownership in developing their own curriculum and assessments, they become invested in the outcomes. This presentation focuses on educators who want to get back to what matters most: our children.

Presenter: Shekema Silveri, Georgia State University, Atlanta, GA

C.06
Session/Panel
Writing Happens Right Here!
Silver Room

This presentation will highlight experiences from the Summer Youth Writing Camp developed by the Southern Nevada Writing Project. This innovative and challenging program was designed as a professional development course to transform the teaching of writing while simultaneously developing a community of enthusiastic young writers (grades 1-12). We will share samples of student writing, as well as insights from SNWP mentors, professional development teachers, parents and students.

Narratives of Pre-service Teachers: Evolving Teacher Identities (Teacher Educators, New Teachers)
Tonopah Room

Teacher identities may be the single most important aspect of teaching and possibly the most neglected and undervalued part of teacher education programs and professional development. Emphasis on teacher identities is usually absent from pre-service teachers’ course work and seldom are discussions relating to identities on the agenda of plans for teacher development. This session invites educators to consider the research on teacher identity and to recognize the importance of engaging all teachers in discussions about their identities. The presenter will model strategies and invite attendees to engage in activities that allow them to explore their own teacher identities. In addition, the presenter will share interpretations of the narratives of five pre-service teachers who participated in a doctoral study during their senior year field experiences.

Kadir Nelson

Kadir Nelson began drawing at the age of three, and painting at age ten. Nelson experimented with several different media and began painting in oils at sixteen. He would later submit his paintings to art competitions and win an art scholarship to study at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, New York. Upon graduating with honors, Nelson began his professional career as an artist, publishing his work and receiving commissions from publishers and production studios such as DreamWorks, where he served as a the lead conceptual artist for Steven Spielberg’s “Amistad” and “Spirit: Stallion of the Cimarron,” Sports Illustrated, Coca-Cola, The United States Postal Service and Major League Baseball, among others.

Most recently, Nelson released his authorial debut, We Are the Ship: The Story of Negro League Baseball (Jump at the Sun/Disney), a New York Times best-selling tribute to the Negro Baseball Leagues which Nelson crafted over a period of almost eight years. It was named a 2009 NCTE Orbis Pictus Honor Book.

Session/Panel
“I Didn’t Know I Had Poems Inside Me”: Poetry, Power, and Critical Literacy (Elementary, Primary/Preschool, New Teachers)
Elko Room

This session examines what happens when teachers and students engage in a unit of study that integrates poetry with issues related to social justice. Through a critical poetry study, teachers began to reposition kids and curriculum, and built interest in navigating the terrain of more critical approaches to literacy instruction.

Chair: Tasha Laman, University of South Carolina, Columbia
Presenter: Amy Seely-Flint, Georgia State University, Atlanta, GA

E.02
Paper Session (1.25 hours)
Families, Bookmaking, Artmaking (Elementary, New Teachers)
Ely Room

Come hear the poetic voices of second graders who composed and published family stories into books at the Iowa Center for the Book. In this presentation we’ll discuss how to circumvent rigid literacy standards and demonstrate how to craft books as art that mean something to children and families.

Presenters: Marie Gernes, The University of Iowa, Iowa City
Kathy Whitmore, The University of Iowa, Iowa City

E.03
Session/Panel
Multicultural Nonfiction: Embracing Universal Human Experiences (Elementary, Middle School)
Goldfield Room

Participants will experience NCTE’s Orbis Pictus award-winning nonfiction titles that provide multicultural perspectives on topics addressing science, social studies, biographies, and the arts. The presenter will examine the author’s notes within this underutilized genre and explore the potential of selected titles as read-alouds and emotion-filled springboards for reader response.

Teaching Literacy Across Curriculum Areas: Exploring the Impact of the New Australian Curriculum
Goldfield Room

Australia is in the process of developing and implementing a new national curriculum. This will see the responsibility for creating, developing and managing this vital component of education move for the first time from the purview of the states and territories to that of the federal government. This is the largest and most influential change in all spheres of education and its influence will be felt in schools, colleges and universities across the country. This session will explore some of these issues and the potential impacts for both pre-service and experienced teachers with respect to teaching literacy in all the curriculum areas.

Presenter: Dr Barbra McKenzie University of Wollongong, Australia
A unique partnership between the Willamette University Graduate School of Education, Salem/Keizer Schools Tech Prep Alternative Education Academy and an opera singer opens the avenue to creating a direct connection between literacy and the arts. Students at the Tech Prep Academy elect to join the W.A.L.I.s as part of their outreach/work experience requirement. The W.A.L.I.s come to the Wu campus to participate in an introduction to learning to read and reading to learn taught by GSE staff. Then the W.A.L.I.s head out to the elementary schools to share reading with students. This year the W.A.L.I.s helped the elementary students write their own books. Add the perspectives of an opera singer and the literacy/arts connection soars to new heights! Share this adventure and plans for the future with the teacher, the professor, and the opera singer...

Presenters: Robin Wright Fromherz, PhD, coordinator of Special Education Willamette University Graduate School of Education Kathy Martin, Literacy Coach, Spanish teacher and mentor for the Salem/Keizer School district and the W.A.L.I.s Rebecca Jean Fromherz, MED Candidate and opera singer

What happens when a teacher weaves student voices into the curriculum? Here chronicled is one teacher’s journey into research with a middle school English curriculum, boys, and the battle with the Decepticons that ensues.

The Incompatibility of Holistic Reading Practices with National Reading Tests
Laughlin Room

Over past decades much research has identified and described ways of nurturing and developing literate communities. In such communities, members read and write to participate in community activities, to interact with the wider world; they read and write to enrich their lives.

With reference to The Luke/Freebody Four Resources Model, Lorraine will contrast the construction of readers in classrooms, who read and write to manage and enrich their daily lives, and to interact within and upon their communities, with, the construction of readers as required by the Australian NAPLAN Reading Tests.

Examples of class work and actual test items will exemplify points made.

"Developing Curriculum: Motivating Inclusion of Family Cultures & Experiences into Classroom Lessons"
Silver Room

This session will demonstrate how high school teachers can incorporate students' families (urban and international) in the lessons using teacher created curriculum particular to their classroom settings. Participants will be exposed to uses of film, literature, and students' experiences within curriculum developed by teachers. The shared strategies at this workshop can be used also in curriculum that is mandated by specific school districts; curriculum units were developed using state academic standards. Participants will be shown the vast number of teacher created curricula resources available to use online from many States. Teachers from varied subject areas will benefit from the curriculum sharing, creation demonstration and audience discussion.

Teaching for Joy and Justice: How (and how not) to Ground the Curriculum in Students’ Lives

What does it mean to ground literacy work in students’ lives? How do we make connections between the curriculum and students’ lived experiences without replicating and affirming social messages about inequality and injustice? How can educators draw on the world around us in ways that go beyond simple description? Reading and writing can be transformative acts where students develop critical literacy skills as they build a place for themselves in the world.
