Greetings from WLU President Debra Goodman

Thank you for your participation in the 26th Annual WLU Literacies for All Summer Institute. If you’ve attended previous Literacies for All Summer Institutes, welcome back! If this is your first institute, you are joining our professional family. You will notice a spirit of reunion and rejuvenation, and you will leave with new ideas and new friends. The Whole Language Umbrella is a professional community informed by beliefs that language involves meaning making, that literacy learning occurs in meaningful contexts, and that teaching practices build on the linguistic and cultural repertoire of students and their families. Whole language pedagogy embraces goals of democracy and social justice.

This year’s theme is Sharing our Stories, Re-visioning Our Worlds: Reading, Writing, and Taking Action. Our keynote speakers explore stories and themes in children’s books, multimodal writing, classroom talk, and family dialogue journals. Concurrent sessions address a wide range of issues for early childhood through college teachers including critical pedagogy and curriculum, multimodal/ digital literacies, kid-watching, multilingual classrooms, professional learning, revaluing learners who struggle, and parents and community. Look for the audience and themes in the session descriptions.

Speaking Out and Acting Up: Our Thursday preconference introduces theater strategies for teacher and student activism addressing social issues in communities and schools. We invite you to continue taking action through planning ways of speaking out and acting up in response to sessions and critical issues.

Early Childhood Education Strand: We are excited this year to initiate our early childhood strand, cosponsored by NCTE Early Childhood Education Assembly (ECEA).

Saturday Symposium Sessions: These two-hour sessions provide all participants with in-depth, first hand learning experiences. This year’s symposia focus on critical literacy in early childhood, miscue analysis and comprehension, and facilitating access and democratic classrooms. The National Association for Media Literacy Education (NAMLE) is also sponsoring a symposium: Start a Conversation on Digital Voice in your Classroom.

Whole Language thrives upon the energies generated by teachers’ and students’ curiosities and circumstances. Your participation contributes to the ongoing conversations about communities that support learning and language development. Please talk with us (Look for the WLU board member ribbons) if you have any questions or suggestions about how we can support your learning and teaching. As a member of the WLU family, please plan to attend the delegates’ assembly meeting on Saturday evening. We need your energy and ideas!

We thank Sue Gallivan, Eileen Maley and others from NCTE for making the institute run smoothly. We are grateful to NCTE Headquarters for all the support given to WLU for the Institute and throughout the year. Debbie Zagorski is invaluable in coordinating WLU activities as our NCTE staff liaison. Emily Nafziger assists us with publicity and website. Visit us at http://www.ncte.org/wlu to learn more about WLU’s work throughout the year.

I know we will see you again at WLU’s Literacies for All Summer Institute next year. The Call for Proposals will be available on Saturday morning.

2016 WLU Literacies for All Summer Institute
July 14–16, 2016
St. Louis, Missouri
Whole Language Umbrella wishes to thank Center for Expansion of Language and Thinking for their sponsorship of the preconference.

National Association of Media Literacy Education (NAMLE) / Youth Participatory Politics Research Network / University of Southern California for their sponsorship of the 2015 Literacies for All Summer Institute.

The line drawings for this conference program were originally created by Ray Martens for the 1991 conference in Phoenix, Arizona. Ray Martens has long been a whole language supporter and has donated his artwork to the Whole Language Umbrella. Ray Martens teaches art education at Towson University, Maryland.

Posters from the 1991 conference are available for purchase, and donations will go to the WLU scholarship fund.
In Memory of Kent Williamson

On June 7, 2015, the Whole Language Umbrella and NCTE lost a leader and a friend. Kent Williamson, Executive Director of NCTE for 15 years, leaves a legacy of professionalism, motivation, and vision for our profession. Kent brought together all members of the NCTE family to understand and carry out our vision as a professional organization. He was instrumental in cementing the relationship between WLU and NCTE.

He always worked to get to know each NCTE member and each group. He helped with our mission to think and act collectively on behalf of teachers and students. For years, he advised the WLU board with financial goals with remarkable clarity and affirmed WLU’s contributions to the field of education. All that knew him enjoyed his collegiality and endless patience, the way he encouraged creative thinking, and his capacity for joy and fun in our work. To the end, he was filled with ideas and action plans for WLU as well as the council. We will miss his friendliness and grace, and at the same time, remember him for his many contributions to both NCTE and WLU. We would not be as vibrant an organization without his gentle leadership.

Don Holdaway
Lifetime Membership Award Recipient

By Jane Baskwill, WLU Board

I first met Don Holdaway in 1982. He had come to Nova Scotia to see his long-time friend and colleague David Doake who was on the Education Faculty at Acadia University. Don conducted a PD session for Nova Scotia teachers about using the model of shared book experience in the classroom.

The auditorium was full and yet, when Don spoke, everyone listened. Perhaps it was his accent – an Aussie was a novelty then. Or perhaps it was his opening book—one of the Bill Martin Instant Readers The Maestro Plays—that captured everyone's imagination and opened their minds to what came after. Don's theory of natural learning, though sometimes misunderstood, and his development of the “shared book experience” made an impact on classrooms worldwide, one that is still felt today every time a teacher opens a Big Book.

Don was strongly against reducing learning and teaching to a series of regimented steps or relegating children to prescribed and often demoralizing reading groups. Instead, he saw literacy as a complex, learned process in which “the child’s own system acts as an amazingly sensitive teaching machine.”

In the 1970s Don was charged with figuring out how to best educate a population of aboriginal children of Maori descent who were entering schools in New Zealand and Australia for the first time. Their culture was quite different from that at school and many of the children were having difficulties learning how to read in traditional ways. Don readily understood that Maori children came to school having already mastered a highly complex language system and they had learned their language in a social setting the same way other children did in other cultures around the world. After studying the social contexts that support learning, he identified four types of common experiences: Demonstration, Participation, Role Play (Practice), and Performance. These became the cornerstones of the Shared Book Experience model.

In 1983, fueled by a grassroots movement that began in Canada, Don Holdaway's instructional model reached across Canada and to the US. Don's book, The Foundations of Literacy (Ashton Scholastic), became a seminal text for understanding the importance of self-direction, motivation, and self-regulation, within a safe and supportive learning environment, for the learning of all children. The Shared Book Experience became part of curriculum documents worldwide. Publishers began producing Big Books for the education market. Teachers found their voices as professional decision-makers and reflective practitioners and shared their classroom stories through their writing and their teaching.

In 1980, Ashton Scholastic published a companion book, Independence in Reading, in which Don considered, in detail, the role of the teacher in the creation of a learning environment that would lead to the internalization of independence in reading. In it you will find topics that educators continue to wrestle with and with which today's teachers are no doubt familiar: common sense in teaching, the importance of personal choice, conferencing, silent reading, critical literacy, informal inventories, and language-rich learning environments. In 1984, after a 15-month Visiting Lecturer appointment at the University of Western Ontario, Don wrote Stability and Change in Literacy Learning (Heinemann & the University of Western Ontario) in which he tackled the major issues in literacy teaching and suggested a way forward with what he called the developmental teaching of literacy.

Don spent most of the next twenty years speaking and consulting around the world. In 2004, at the age of 74, Don Holdaway died and with his death Whole Language was deprived of one of its foundational thinkers, innovators, and teachers.

Don was the maestro of the Bill Martin book. He found joy in playing with language and had a profound respect for the ability of teachers. It is with great pleasure that The Whole Language Umbrella awards the Lifetime Membership Award posthumously to Don Holdaway—a true maestro.
Conference Strands and Themes

Early Childhood Education: Co-sponsored by the NCTE

Speaking Out and Acting Up: Using Theater Strategies for Activating Teachers, Students, and Communities to Respond to Oppressive and Controversial Situations

Facilitator: Katy Rubin, Theatre of the Oppressed NYC

Host: Rick Meyer, University of New Mexico, Albuquerque

This year’s preconference workshop will focus on the use of dramatic strategies to address issues facing our students, our communities, and ourselves. As teachers and community members, we’re often confronted with events, laws, opinions, mandates, curriculum, and other impositions upon our classrooms, schools, homes, and workplaces. During this workshop we will learn, practice, and plan for the use of theater as a vehicle for raising consciousness and finding viable solutions to complex situations. Whether we face issues of fairness in kindergarten, racism in a third-grade classroom, sexism in a graduate course, or inequity within our community, the strategies presented offer unique ways to articulate and initiate response to critical social issues.

We’re thrilled to have Theatre of the Oppressed NYC leading the workshop. Through partnerships with social service organizations and city agencies, Theatre of the Oppressed NYC creates theater troupes with community members who face pressing social, economic, health, and human rights issues. The troupes create and perform plays based on real-life struggles, which engage diverse audiences in theatrical brainstorming—or Forum Theatre—to activate communities and creatively challenge systems of oppression.

Grace Lin

Grace Lin is the author and illustrator of picture books, early readers, and middle-grade novels. Her 2010 Newbery Honor book Where the Mountain Meets the Moon was chosen for Al Roker's Today Show Kid's Book Club and was a New York Times bestseller. Ling & Ting, Lin's first early reader, was honored with the Theodor Geisel Honor in 2011. Most of Lin's books are about the Asian American experience because, she believes, “Books erase bias; they make the uncommon every day and the mundane exotic. A book makes all cultures universal.” Lin is an Astrid Lindgren Memorial Award nominee for the United States.

Lin will present “The Extra Adjective.” Grace Lin is often described as a “multicultural” children's book author and illustrator. Find out about Grace's path to becoming a children's book creator and how she learned to live and even love the “extra adjective.”

Grace will be signing after her talk. Little Shop of Stories will be providing her publications.

Take that, Prince Ronald! Powerful Picturebooks that Help Four, and Five-Year-Olds Disrupt Gender Binaries
Early Childhood Education (ECEA) Early Childhood, New Teachers
Panel Literacy, Social Action

Participants: Kathryn Whitmore, Christie Angleton, Kristen Herbert, University of Louisiana at Lafayette

Annotation: How did Elizabeth (i.e. The Paper Bag Princess) become so strong and smart? How can she and other picturebook characters help preschoolers develop identities that are not limited by gender binaries? This session shares the story of two preschool classrooms that explored gender through powerful books.

Changing the Landscape of Professional Learning with Technology Integration
Teacher to Teacher Elementary, Teacher Educators
Panel Professional Learning

Participants: Carol Gilles, University of Missouri, Columbia; Tami Ensor, Two Mile Prairie Elementary, Columbia, MO

Annotation: In this session we critique traditional professional development and offer an alternative view that emphasizes teacher voice in integrating technology within the literacy curriculum. We will share examples from an elementary school as a demonstration of how this process could be used in other settings. Bring your “device” to this session!

Constructing Competence in Special Needs Writers: Process Writing with Learners with Language Disorder
Elementary, Middle School

Participants: Holly Damico, Jack Damico, Ryan Nelson, University of Louisiana at Lafayette

Annotation: This presentation will report on an ethnographic investigation of the constructive writing practices of three school-aged learners with diagnoses of language disorder enrolled in a process-oriented writing intervention program. Demonstrations of each participant’s constructed strategies and parallel change to their written products will be included.

Integrating Visual Arts into the English Classroom

Secondary Teacher Educators
Arts, Multimodal

Participants: Sirpa Grierson, Brigham Young University, Provo, UT; Sarah Orme, Monticello High School, Charlottesville, VA

Annotation: Integrating visual arts into the English classroom enhances teachers’ ability to scaffold and model literacy practices. We use fine art paintings to engage students at three levels during multiple readings of a text. We transfer this process to writing, and “speak out,” or tell our own stories, in novel ways.

Students Exploring Scientific Informational Texts: What Have We Learned?

Co-sponsored by the Center for Expansion of Language and Thinking (CELT)

Elementary, General
Literature, Curriculum

Participants: Keri-Anne Croce, Towson University, Towson, MD; Lucy Spence, University of South Carolina, Columbia; Alan Flurkey, Hofstra University, Long Island, NY

Annotation: This session will invite audience members to participate in discussions regarding the use of scientific informational texts across the curriculum. A panel will briefly discuss sociocultural frameworks and transactional theory in relation to science texts. Sociolinguistics will also frame discussions of textual features.

At the heart of whole language is the belief that teachers are professionals who make countless decisions every day that make a difference in the lives of learners. Those decisions are not a function of following a prescriptive program. They require knowledge and understanding and skill. For more than 25 years, the WLU Summer Institute has offered teachers a venue for developing insight and for sharing experiences with like-minded educators. Teaching is an honored profession at WLU!

Sharing Our Stories: Engaging in Authentic Writing Practices with English Language Learners

Teacher to Teacher  Elementary, Early Childhood
Panel  Writing

Participants: Eliza Allen, Anna Bock, Dalton Public Schools, Dalton, GA

Annotation: This panel presentation describes authentic writing practices used with English Language Learners. The first presentation describes how a classroom can be a space for kindergarten students to see themselves as writers. The second presentation examines the social nature of response as fourth grade students write about their reading on Twitter.

Re-visioning Writing in Elementary Classrooms

Teacher to Teacher  Elementary, Curriculum Specialists, Early Childhood
Panel  Revaluing Learners, Writing, Arts/Multimodal

This session explores writing in K–5 classrooms including: instructional strategies for incorporating the art, music, and dance into cross-curricular writing; and the amazing responses when student writings are used for mentor texts, particularly with struggling writers. A variety of student writing samples will be shared and discussed.

Sharing Stories: Using Students’ Writing to Shape and Re-vision the World of Writing

Participant: Lisa Eickholdt, Georgia Gwinnett College, Lawrenceville, GA

Incorporating the Arts into Cross-Curricular Writing for K–5 Students

Participants: Kristen Sousa, Saraland City Schools, AL; Paige Vitulli, University of South Alabama, Mobile

Implementing a Writing Workshop for Low SES Students: More Chances for Learning to Write and More Chances for Successful Peer Interaction

Poster Writing, Elementary, Early Childhood

Participants: Leah Carruth, Carole Janisch, Texas Tech University, Lubbock

Annotation: Writing workshop is an instructional method that helps children become confident and vibrant writers through a personal context while allowing numerous opportunities for appropriate and positive social interactions among peers. This approach has potential for helping children who need more responsive instruction in order to achieve and understand writing.

Early Childhood Education (ECEA) Critical Literacy, Pre-service Teachers

Poster Professional Learning

Participant: Angela Pack, Montclair State University, Montclair, NJ

Annotation: A critical literacy discussion group worked to unpack individual relationship with literacy, power, and privilege in society and understand the role of critical literacy in education. The participants were pre-service teachers and an early childhood education faculty member at an urban community college. Findings of the study as well as artifacts created by the participants will be shared.

Crossing the Interstellar Divide: Implementing Science in the College Composition

Teacher to Teacher College, Secondary

Poster Composition, Curriculum

Participant: Heather Wilkins, University of South Alabama, Mobile, AL

Annotation: In a college English composition classroom filled with students majoring in the sciences, instructors must find a way to implement effective instruction and link the two disciplines. Showing students that both science and writing are processes and constantly in flux is the key to connecting these two “divisive” fields.

Helping High School Students in a Special Education Classroom Improve Inferencing Skills through Critical Literacy Instruction

Special Educators, Classroom Educators, Critical Literacy Theorists and Researchers

Poster Critical Literacy

Participants: Joanne Smith, Shannon Fox, Fontbonne University, St. Louis, MO

Annotation: Often, special education teachers struggle to find instructional strategies that allow students with learning disabilities to “think outside the box.” This presentation will explore whether the ability to make inferences increases when high school students, identified as having learning disabilities, are taught how to use critical literacy skills to understand texts.

Digital Stories and Student Voices

Elementary Digital Literacies

Participants: Amy Seely Flint, Sarah Turnbull, Rebecca Barria, Georgia State University, Atlanta, GA; Melissa Golden, Jeffrey Gentry, Cary Reynolds Elementary, Doraville, GA

Annotation: This presentation focuses on how digital storytelling is a powerful pedagogical tool in promoting students' positive literate identities. Participants will learn how to incorporate a digital storytelling. The goal is to offer a glimpse into how a transformative pedagogical tool can shape and cultivate students' voices in remarkable ways.

Intentional Teaching: Creating Holistic Phonological Awareness Experiences
Early Childhood Education (ECEA) Early Childhood, Teacher Educators
Workshop

Participant: Kim Pinkerton, Amelia Hewitt, University of Houston-Downtown, TX

Annotation: Explore intentional teaching of phonological awareness through collaborative partnerships. Learn that it’s not letters and sounds but fun with language that builds strong literacy foundations. Examine holistic experiences developed by professors and teacher candidates engaged in collaborative, field-based service learning. Design authentic phonological awareness activities to improve current teaching practices.

Issues of Race, Space, and Place: Teaching Multicultural and Postcolonial Literature

Teacher to Teacher  Secondary
Panel  Literature

Participant: Jennifer Arias, Adlai E. Stevenson High School, Lincolnshire, IL

Annotation: Multicultural and postcolonial themes are addressed, including “otherness,” displacement, and images of dis/abled bodies and minds. Teachers gain lessons and activities promoting diversity, close reading, and critical writing for students ranging from English Language Learners to AP level. Novels discussed include Wide Sargasso Sea, The Bone People, The Absolutely True Diary of a Part-Time Indian, Balzac and the Little Chinese Seamstress, Life of Pi, and Beloved.

Language, Culture, and the Jamaican Classroom, Embracing Diversity

Early Childhood Education  Early Childhood, Teacher Educators
Conversation  Language, Culture

Participants: Zoyah Kinkead-Clark, University of the West Indies, Jamaica, W.I.; Shalene Kinkead, Shortwood Teachers’ College, Jamaica, W.I.

Annotation: The Jamaican context is unique in that while the majority of our children speak “patois”, this unofficial language is not embraced as authentic and valuable. This session focuses on how culture influences the language, families, and communities and how this has implications for the teaching and learning experiences of the classroom.

Celebrating the Past, Present, and Future of WLU
(Tickets are required in advance.)

At this year’s luncheon, we celebrate 25 reunions since the first WLU conference in St. Louis in 1990. As whole language teachers, we come together around a meal for stories, songs, and images reflecting on friendships and inspirational conference experiences. Storytellers and song leaders include Ken and Yetta Goodman, Amy Seely Flint, and Rick Meyer.

Whether you are a first-time or long-time attendee, you won’t want to miss this year’s luncheon.

Breaking through Walls and Barriers of Mandates: Linking Practice to Teacher Knowledge

Early Childhood Education (ECEA)  Elementary, Early Childhood, Administrators, New Teachers, Teacher Educators
Panel  Professional Learning

Participants: Tasha Tropp Laman, Kathryn Whitmore, University of Louisville, KY; Shelley Toerner, Lincoln Elementary School, Dayton, KY; Julie Elliott, Kathleen Mullins, Stacy Johnson, Trunnel Elementary School, Louisville, KY; Carla Wilson, Bullitt County Public Schools, Shepherdsville, KY

Annotation: In this session, early childhood teachers and university faculty share their learning from a yearlong early literacy course and how teachers came to see that children are developers rather than strugglers, the need to build children's literate identities rather than destroy identities, and finally how teachers gained professional courage to break down walls and barriers to rely on their professional knowledge and support children.

The Power of the Selfie Center: Using Technology to Build Meaningful Reflection in the Readers’ Workshop

Teacher to Teacher  Elementary, General
Panel  Digital Literacies

Participants: Cynthia Merrill, University of New Hampshire, Durham; Beth Landry, Maple Wood School, Somersworth, NH; Mandie King, Dondero School, Portsmouth, NH; Amy Riley, Deb Craig, Stratham Memorial School, Stratham, NH; Bonnie Painchaud, Loudon Elementary School, Loudon, NH

Annotation: Panelists will describe how the Selfie Center enriches their literacy block. Panelists will share results, ever-changing dimensions, and the power of this center in first through fifth grade classrooms. Participants will view videos of student selfie stories and learn the steps for implementing a Selfie Center. Panelists will demonstrate student synthesis through hash tags, and use of primary documents for content integration. Participants will walk away with simple, effective, and dynamic ways to integrate technology into their literacy block(s).

Nurturing the American Dialogue: Empowering Students to Make Connections between Events in History and Current Issues through Reading, Research, Debate, and Writing

Teacher to Teacher    Elementary, Middle School
Panel                Curriculum

Participants: Nancy Galas, Rebecca D’Angelo, Mary Greska, Edison School, Elmhurst, IL

Annotation: Join three panelists as they engage participants in the same kind of simulations and dialogue in which their students participate. In sharing sample learning activities, the panelists demonstrate how inquiries into significant social issues invite learners to embrace the story of America resulting in better readers, writers, and critical thinkers.

Every Picture Tells a Story: Locating Student Identity in Multimodal Narratives

Panel                Elementary, Adult Literacy/College
                    Arts/Multimodal

Participants: Marilyn Buono, Melinda Smith, Sasha Ramlal, Josefa Pace, Elizabeth Hynes-Musnisky, Hofstra University, Long Island, NY

Annotation: A diverse panel of teachers examines the ways our students’ stories become richer, deeper, and more revelatory when they are created authentically, freely, and imaginatively within a holistic classroom environment that embraces the agency and expressive possibilities of multimodal approaches to learning. Examples of students’ artistic narratives will be shared.

Studies of Young Children’s Texts and Text Construction

Early Childhood Education Assembly (ECEA)    Elementary, Early Childhood
Panel                Literature, Language, Culture, Kidwatching

Three research studies will be shared addressing: meaning construction of poetic texts through multimodal design; an analysis of CCSS K–1 text sets through a postcolonial and feminist lens; and print awareness in three- and four-year-old children classified as preschool students with disabilities. Examples and video clips of student responses will be discussed.

Using Wordless Picture Books to Engage Learners and Support Literacy Development

Elementary, Teacher Educators
Revaluing Learners, Multimodal

Participants: Debra Goodman, Alan Flurkey, Hofstra University, Long Island, NY

Annotation: This session explores multimodal, invitation-based workshops for small group literacy support. As one example, Lee's wordless book Wave, followed by storyboards, engages 3rd/4th graders as author/illustrators. Participants discuss a literacy practicum experience for revaluing “struggling” learners, using assessment-informed practices that build upon children's literacy repertoire and life experiences.

Girls and Boys for Others: Engaging in Critical Literacy Using a Social Justice Framework

Elementary
Literacy, Social Action

Participants: Annmarie Jackson, and Cassandra Matthews, Georgia State University, Atlanta, GA

Annotation: This will be a workshop format. There will be a 30-minute work session for K–8 grades to create a unit using K–12 literacy and social studies standards. Participants will establish essential questions to meet end goals of the literacy and social studies standards. Participants will outline literacy-integrated activities, using stem questions and graphic organizers. Each small group will share in a 15-minute block on their proposed unit. Last 10 minutes for questions.

Fostering and Sustaining Literacy Partnerships with Parents/Family Literacy

Early Childhood Education Assembly (ECEA)  Elementary, Early Childhood, General
Workshop  Community, Parents, Family Literacy

In this interactive session, one presenter shares strategies for involving fathers and male caregivers in children’s literacy, and effective ways to share your teacher philosophy and practice. The second presenter describes an elementary school’s parent group initiative to support vulnerable readers, addressing parents’ positionality towards literacy, and connections between parental literacy beliefs and ways parents support their children’s literacies.

When Interpretations of Assessment Data Collide

Elementary, Early Childhood, Middle School, New Teachers, Library Media Specialist, Curriculum Specialists, Teacher Educators
Conversation  Early Childhood

Participants: Mary Fahrenbruck, New Mexico State University, Las Cruces; Yetta Goodman, University of Arizona, Tucson

Annotation: Few would argue that assessments yield valuable data that educators can use to make decisions about teaching and learning. What happens, though, when conflicting data interpretations occur? Whose voice is heard and honored? Join the conversation about this problematic issue and help generate possible solutions especially for families trying to support their children in school.

As long as I’ve been attending professional conferences (and it is very long), I never come away from the WLU Literacies for All Summer Institute without learning something new and feeling uplifted at the power of the ideas and the brilliance of the teachers who come together there.

Ken Goodman
Tucson, Arizona

WLU was one of my first professional homes, a place where I found my soul resonating with the focus on children. It was the first conference I attended where everyone . . . EVERYONE . . . greeted you and made certain you were folded into a group. Conversations are rich. Ideas and brainstorming and what-ifs are food to the hungry mind. WLU people are like a family where the kinship is thought and caring and respect. The Literacies for All Summer Institute is a homecoming.

Lester Laminack
Asheville, North Carolina

Literacies for All is more like a revival than a conference—a revival of my teaching spirit and the beliefs about children and learning I hold so dear.

Candace Kuby and Tara Gutshall Rucker

Candace Kuby is an assistant professor of Early Childhood Education at the University of Missouri. She is the author of Critical Literacy in the Early Childhood Classroom: Unpacking Histories, Unlearning Privilege (2013) and co-editor of Disrupting Qualitative Inquiry: Possibilities and Tensions in Educational Research (2014).

Tara Gutshall Rucker is in her eighth year as an elementary teacher in Columbia Public Schools, Columbia, Missouri. She received her MA in Curriculum and Instruction through the Teaching Fellows program at the University of Missouri and is currently working on an elementary mathematics specialist certificate.

Kuby and Rucker are currently writing a book (due out in 2016) about their five years of co-researching in a multimodal writers’ studio.

Kuby and Rucker will present “Embracing the Uncertainties of Literacy Desirings: Sharing Our Stories from a Multimodal Writers’ Studio.”

The WLU Literacies for All Summer Institute and the NCTE Annual Convention are my two favorite conferences. While I learn a great deal at the Annual Convention, I particularly appreciate the small, intimate nature of the WLU Summer Institute. Between sessions and in the evenings, informal gatherings spring up at tables, along benches, and in hallways, as favorite authors chat with new teachers, regular attendees welcome first-timers, and good friends gather from across the country. The sessions offer rich details from progressive classrooms along with new research threads and conversations about important political issues that affect our teaching. I can’t think of a better venue for sharing and expanding my professional practice.

Introduction of Featured Speaker: Jane Baskwill

Peter Johnston

Peter Johnston is Professor Emeritus at the University at Albany. His recent research has focused on the consequences of teacher's classroom talk for the ways children learn and experience themselves and each other, and how engaged reading influences children's social, emotional, moral, and academic development. He is a member of the International Reading Association’s Literacy Research Panel and the Reading Hall of Fame. Recent awards include the State University of New York Chancellor’s Award for Excellence in Research and Creative Activities and the P. David Pearson Scholarly Influence Award from the Literacy Research Association for his book Choice Words, for having demonstrably and positively influenced literacy teaching in classrooms and districts nationally. His newest book is Opening Minds.

Johnston will present: “Engagement, Achievement, and Ecologies of Classroom Talk.” Modest changes in classroom practice can change the entire ecology of the classroom, initiating cascades of previously unimagined consequences. For example, focusing on engaged reading alters the qualities of classroom life and the qualities of the students beyond their academic achievement, including their behavior and relationships at school and at home, their moral development, their self-regulation, and even their happiness. These changes, mediated by talk, have implications for how we think about reading, achievement, and the relationship between research and practice.
